Abstract

Gene Jaeger, Veterans Remember, VR2-A-L-2012-016

Biographical Information Overview of Interview: Eugene ‘Gene’ Jaeger was born on October 6th, 1920 in Ottawa, Illinois, and grew up in Geneva, Illinois, the son of a state bank examiner. He graduated from Marmion Military Academy in Aurora, Illinois in 1937 and from Notre Dame University in 1942. He wanted to be a Navy Aviator, but, after failing the eye exam, he instead took an abbreviated officer training course at Princeton University. Upon graduation, he was assigned to LST (Landing Ship-Tank) 400, a new class of ships designed to support amphibious landings. By May of 1943 LST 400 was in a convoy steaming toward the Mediterranean Sea, with Ensign Jaeger serving as the Communications Officer and Watch Officer.

LST 400 supported the Sicily landings in July, 1943, and the landings at Salerno in September, 1943. By November, LST 400 sailed to England and spent the next several months preparing for the D-Day Landings. On June 6th Jaeger’s ship was in position off the coast of Normandy, and by the end of the day had discharged its load onto Utah Beach. Over the next several months LST 400 made roughly 50 round trips, delivering ammunition, fuel, and other supplies. It made one supply run up the Seine River during the Battle of the Bulge, and, later in the war, was configured to deliver railroad cars. At the end of the war in Europe LST 400 returned to the states. Once in New Orleans (via New York City), Jaeger received orders reassigning him to San Francisco and the USS Sardonian. He spent the next several months trying to marry up with the ship, and, in the process, spent time at a base in Guiuan, the Philippines and Shanghai, China. In March of 1946 he was finally shipped home to Illinois.
